One reason that I enjoy the commute to school is that the drive gives me uninterupted (1) time to myself. The classes and socializing at college is (2) great, and so is the time I spend with my family, but sometimes all this togetherness keeps you (3) from being able to think. In fact, I look forward to the time I have alone (4) it gives me a chance to plan what I'll accomplish in the day ahead. For example, one Tuesday afternoon my history professor announces (5) that a rough outline for our semester report was due that Friday. Fortunately (6), I had already done some reading and (7) I had checked my proposed topic with her the week before. Therefore, on the way home in the car that evening (8), I planned the entire history report in my mind. Then all I had to do when I got home quickly jot it down before I forgot it. When I handed the professor the outline at 8.30 Wednesday morning (9). She asked me "If I had stayed stayed up all night working on it". She was amazed when I told her that I owed it all to commuting.
